COACHING IS A WONDERFUL EXPERIENCE. I would encourage anyone to give it a try. I see it as an opportunity to make these kids feel good about themselves, whether they can make a basket or not. There are so many lessons to be learned.

I love watching the transition from wanting to take every shot to learning to pass the ball to others, being willing to share the glory with teammates.

After 38 years of coaching the Hough Street Hawks, there have been a few changes, in shoe technology and hair lengths which tend to go up and down. I have coached second generations—sons of prior team members— and as any teacher knows, 'the apple doesn't fall far from the tree'.

Attitudes in the boys at Hough Street School has remained consistently positive. Their minds are open to learning and they want to be good team members. I have always stressed that this is for FUN, and practicing good sportsmanship is the goal. These boys come together each year with a broad range of skills, but some of the biggest winners of each season are those who are not particularly athletic. As a team, we all learn lessons from each other, and they are often not about basketball at all.

The parents have always been so supportive by encouraging the attendance at practices and by coming to the games for moral support. And at the end of each season we hold a Parent/Son game, which is always great fun!

I never dreamed I would be doing this so long. I was simply helping out a principal who was in a bind and needed a fill-in coach that first year. The truth is, I benefit much more than the boys do. I've always loved being with kids and they have taught me and humbled me.

BHS Students Report on Barrington's Town Warming PHOTOGRAPHY BY LINDA M. BARRETT

THE BARRINGTON CULTURAL COMMISSION hosted its second Barrington Town Warming on February 9, 2019. The theme of the day was, "Vision 2020: What Leaders See for the Future and the Foundations That Ground Us Through the Ages". Held at Barrington's White House, the nearly 200 guests enjoyed a day of presentations, question and answer sessions, and a lunch from Wild Asparagus. Northern Trust was the Presenting Sponsor for the program. Greg and Anna Brown sponsored the Fireside Chat with historian and Pulitzer Prize-winning author, Doris Kearns Goodwin. Quintessential Barrington asked five Barrington High School students who are business owners through the BHS Incubator program to report on each of the five main segments. Their reports begin on page 100.

Panel One speakers Tom South, Michael Iden, Lia Merninga, and Anne Pramaggiore.

PANEL ONE SPEAKERS: THE FUTURE OF FINANCE, ENERGY, TRANSPORTATION, AND SCIENCE By Madeline Connors

The first panel of speakers was comprised of Thomas A. South, Anne R. Pramaggiore, Michael Iden, and Lia Merminga. Each one discussed the challenges and changes they will face in their industry.

Executive Vice President and CIO of Northern Trust, Thomas South, said there was no "ultra-provider" within the financial industry as might be found in other industries. While financial firms are slow to change, they are beginning to face an irregular marketplace. With the explosion of online payments and digital currency such as bitcoin, the financial industry is becoming high-tech. As this shift continues to become the norm, individuals and firms must ask themselves what they value more: convenience or privacy?

Senior Executive Vice President and CEO of Exelon Utilities, Anne Pramaggiore, talked about our power grid and how her current role is to redesign the electric system. While our current electric system is one of the greatest engineering feats of the 20th century, we require a system to fit our 21st century needs. This means an electric system that is clean, resilient, and optimizes connectedness. We need an electric system that neutralizes climate change, that avoids failure, and that allows us to connect vast regions under the same energy source.

The Former General Director, Car and Locomotive Director (Ret.) for Union Pacific Railroad, Michael Iden, was the expert on transportation. Transportation is rapidly changing due to demand for clean electrical batteries instead of combustion engines and autonomous (selfdriving) vehicles. He emphasized that the greater task was not the innovation of technology, but the deployment of technology. To meet this demand, the industry must build the infrastructure necessary to create an environment fit for a new generation of transportation.

Lia Merminga, Ph.D., the PIP-II Project Director of Fermilab, concluded with her work studying neutrinos. A neutrino is an elementary particle that is so small that at one time scientists mistakenly believed that it had no mass. Describing to us her work in as simple of terms as she could, neutrinos come in three "flavors" and scientists theorize that neutrinos switch between these three flavors. Merminga is a part of an international mission to study these neutrinos and their behavior by sending them from the Fermilab in Illinois 800 miles to North Dakota. To do so, they are currently building an incredibly powerful detector called the PPI-II accelerator. Accomplishing this study would help us understand the constructs of our universe and how this relates to our existence.

Each speaker also mentioned the words of Rev. Dr. Zina Jacque. Dr. Jacque spoke passionately of not only innovating and progressing, but doing so as a community that embodies all people.

Mike Tobin of FOX News

MIKE TOBIN: MEDIA IN THE MODERN WORLD By Wyatt Lindquist

One of my favorite sections of the day was when Senior Correspondent Mike Tobin from FOX News spoke about fake news. Fake news is a huge issue in America and Tobin made a great and hilarious speech about its implications. Tobin stated that when he was a young boy, his father would read the paper every morning. When his father would not agree with the viewpoints of that paper, he would then move to another paper that he agreed with more. He then talked about many flaws that are present in the industry such as circular reporting and crusader reporting, which cause either incomplete or biased research to become published. He states that too many people join the profession "to make a difference" which means that people are already biased in their reason for joining the industry.

Biased journalism is a huge problem and Tobin recognizes that his organization FOX News is also biased, at which point he began to talk about why we create such biased information. Tobin began by stating that in the U.S. we have a free press that is protected by the First Amendment, as well as a free market protected by the ideologies of capitalism. He then transitioned back to his opening story about his father reading different papers depending on which one he most agreed with. Together, they paint the picture of why we have fake news in America; it is because news is a private business and they fear losing customers if they publish things that go against the views of their readers. He finishes by stating that we, the readers, are the boss of the news industry and nobody writes against the views of their boss.

Mary Sneed, Chris Erskine, and Holly Madden

BARRINGTON AND BEYOND: HUMORIST CHRIS ERSKINE By Mary McAuliff

Los Angeles Times columnist and bestselling author Chris Erskine's segment was a breath of fresh air. Peppered with charming anecdotes and wry, self-deprecating humor, he cheerily recalled his fond memories of an idyllic suburban childhood. Tales of crab apple fights, hastily constructed tree forts, and Saturday matinees at the Catlow served as a poignant reminder of a simpler time in Barrington's history.

More than just self-indulgent nostalgia, this trip down memory lane underlined the importance of staying true to your roots. Although his successful career has landed him thousands of miles away in Los Angeles, Erskine noted that he will forever consider Barrington his true home. He's the first to admit that it's far from perfect, but the rich history and close-knit community that Barrington provides are what makes it such a special place to grow up, even today.

Furthermore, having a reference point to come back to is more vital than ever. The frenzied pace of modern life can be overwhelming, but Erskine emphasized the importance of stepping back and focusing on the essentials. Books and people, he insisted, will always be worth paying attention to. Looking to the past allows us to tune out the noise of the present and understand what binds us together: community, curiosity, and genuine human connection. He explained that a hiking club he founded with a couple of friends, for example, has become an indispensable social outlet. At its heart, this is what the Town-Warming is all about. Whether it's taking a moment to bond over shared childhood experiences, or coming together to hear from the country's most influential leaders, interacting and learning from the people around us remains invaluable.

Christopher Wild, Scott Powder, Miguel Diaz, and Nancy Burgoyne.

SPEAKERS: THE FUTURE OF OUR FOUNDATIONS By Joseph Lederer

PANEL TWO

When I arrived at the Barrington White House for the Town Warming,

I had felt as if the event was going to focus on the business aspect of everything. But there was more to the panels than just business. I chose the panel, "The Future of Our Foundations: What Roots Us in the Face of Change?"

Nancy Burgoyne, CCO and Vice President for Clinical Services, Family Institute, Northwestern University, gave insight into the importance of family traditions such as family meals. She stated how important it was for children to have this time at least 3-4 times per week to create structure and routine for the kid which leads to a better being.

The healthcare portion was also interesting for me being a prospective pre-med major. Scott Powder spoke about three changing topics in the healthcare industry: the science of healthcare, the technology of healthcare, and the economics of healthcare. The most engaging portion of this speech was his discussion on the development of science and technology in healthcare.

He spoke about how as we extend lives via new technology, neurodegenerative diseases become more common. He also spoke about the personalization of treatments coming when we start using genetic markers to show the genetic effects of medications. This specific panel gave me insight into potential future professions and aspects of adult life.

Greg Brown and Doris Kearns Goodwin

LEADERSHIP IN TURBULENT TIMES A FIRESIDE CHAT WITH DORIS KEARNS GOODWIN AND GREG BROWN By Cyrus Markazi

On Saturday, February 9, I attended the Barrington Town-Warming 2019 event with my fellow Business Incubator class company team members. Doris Kearns Goodwin and Greg Brown's segment was the final speech of the event. Kearns Goodwin discussed the qualities of a successful leader, highlighting the following four former presidents for their ability to lead our country in times of crisis: Abraham Lincoln, Theodore Roosevelt, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and Lyndon B. Johnson.

Kearns Goodwin explained how each president brought about positive change in times of adversity. Abraham Lincoln was level-headed even during stressful times, ultimately ending slavery and unifying our country. Theodore Roosevelt fought alongside other fellow American soldiers in the Spanish-American War. Franklin Delano Roosevelt restored our country's hope after the Great Depression. Lastly, she underscored how Lyndon B. Johnson made extreme progress for civil rights while the Vietnam War was being heavily criticized.

Kearns Goodwin shared personal experiences with good leaders, such as her story of when she met Lyndon B. Johnson. She spotlighted her own conversations with good leaders while she was studying at Harvard University regarding the aphorism, "Does man make the times, or do times make the man?" After listening to her speech, the most significant lesson that I learned from Ms. Kearns Goodwin's insights is that great leaders are made, not born.
