

From left: Paul Ingallinera, Ashley Nicole, Dr. Denardo Ramos, Sharmila Wijeyakumar, Kendra Fluegeman, and Edwin Aguiar.

Rahab's Daughters

BUILDING A MOVEMENT AND REBUILDING LIVES

RAHAB'S DAUGHTERS recognizes that human trafficking is the 2nd fastest-growing crime in the world, which is why they consider all routes to combating it. Not only do they fight against it through face-to-face efforts, but they also combat it online using technology. They have created software and a variety of different online platforms to help take a stand against this horrific and heartbreaking multi-billion-dollar industry.

Sharmila (Sam) Wijeyakumar, a survivor of human trafficking, co-founded Rahab's Daughters in 2013 with her family. Having lived the experience of being a human trafficking victim, she set out to create an organization that offers support to survivors in a variety of ways, while working to put an end to human trafficking. Together with her family and an army of dedicated volunteers, donors, and partners, Rahab's Daughters has grown into an effective and dynamic organization that aims to attack the problem from all sides. Supporters have enabled the nonprofit to offer support and resources to over 1,500 survivors through its rescue and rehabilitation efforts. Headquartered in the Northwest Suburbs, their team engages community members through prevention and awareness programs that are offered throughout the Chicagoland area, as well as in other chapter locations, including Indiana, Florida, New York, Minnesota, and California. Learn more at rahabsdaughters.org.

Benita White Arnold and Donnell Arnold

Rahab's Daughters volunteers are (from left) Heather Kiedrowski, Hugo Morales, Tamika Morales, Mona Jee, Margaret Debska, Carissa Dahik, Steve Dahik, Heidi Provo, and Ian Provo.

Michelle Chase and William Carroll

Erin Sherrow and Rahab's Daughters Indiana Chapter rep Terri Griffin

Nick and Heather Kiedrowski

John Anthony is the host of "Black and Right" on AM 560 radio, with Mark Vargas, Judson University alumnus and guest interviewer for the university's World Leaders Forum.

Hugo and Tamika Morales

Tamika Morales, Saray Rodriguez, Kevin Abernson, and Kim Abernson.

Sharmila Wijeyakumar is the founder of Rahab's Daughters.